UK Outlook for Monday 29 Nov 2021 to Monday 13 Dec 2021:
Conditions remaining similar during late November and early December, with the northwesterly flow dominating. High pressure close by to the south and southwest will bring a good deal of dry and settled weather, where frost and fog is likely overnight, the fog often slow to clear in the morning. The weather will be more changeable further north, with spells of rain, and occasional strong winds, this interspersed with sunshine and showers. Temperatures above average overall, but short-lived colder spells are likely, with the risk of snow and ice, especially in the north.
